Scientists have reported the possible discovery of a prehistoric kangaroo species in the remote forests of Mindanao, Philippines, a species believed to have gone extinct since the last Ice Age. Resembling the ancient but small dwarf version of Protemnodon, the creature was spotted by researchers and indigenous communities, who described it as a marsupial with powerful hind legs and a hopping gait. If confirmed, this finding could challenge existing theories on species distribution and evolution in Southeast Asia. Camera traps and DNA analysis are underway to verify the species, but experts warn that deforestation and human activity may threaten its survival.

Duterte, who is running for mayor of Davao City, wished to return home to campaign for the upcoming May midterm elections.

She added that her father's lawyers are currently working on a legal remedy, in hopes of securing his release before the next International Criminal Court (ICC) hearing in September 2025.
